Peter Bogdasarian is a litigator focusing on securities enforcement matters as well as class action and white collar defense. Peter serves as chair of the firm's e-discovery team and is the firm's chief privacy officer, protecting the firm's data — including information received from clients — from unauthorized access.

Peter counsels businesses and individuals as they field inquiries, examinations, investigations and enforcement actions initiated by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), other federal and state agencies, and self-regulatory organizations. Peter's practice also includes conducting internal investigations that advise and assist companies in preventing and responding to regulatory actions.

With several years of experience practicing in securities enforcement, antitrust and e-discovery, Peter is a sought-after resource. He provides advice on complex discovery matters in connection with the firm's class action and securities practices and counsels clients on e-discovery best practices, emerging technologies and trends. He also helps clients in connection with data privacy and cybersecurity issues related to litigation, policies and procedures, and mergers and acquisitions.

Peter is a frequent contributor to Stradley Ronon's corporate and securities blog, Business Vantage Point, providing timely industry updates and tips from leading practitioners across the firm.
