Rebecca Fallk concentrates her practice in the areas of securities litigation and enforcement, white collar defense, internal investigations and compliance. She also represents clients in legal proceedings and litigation before courts, government agencies and other authorities.

Rebecca represents various clients in high-profile internal investigations and matters that involve federal regulatory agencies. She has hands-on litigation experience working directly with clients who receive government probes and subpoenas, handling witness interviews, attending meetings with the government, drafting court pleadings and briefs, and preparing for depositions, oral arguments and trials. Rebecca frequently represents individuals and companies accused of violations and fraudulent practices by U.S. attorneys' offices, state attorneys general, and the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). Rebecca also has experience representing companies in connection with regulatory investigations and enforcement matters from the SEC, Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA), and other regulatory authorities.

Before joining Stradley Ronon, Rebecca practiced at an Am Law 200 firm in Washington, D.C., where she defended clients to enforcement officials, assisted in compliance reviews of large companies, as well as counseled clients on sophisticated corporate matters involving due diligence. Rebecca previously served as a legal intern for the U.S. Department of Justice in the Criminal Division, Public Integrity Section; as a criminal law intern at the Public Defender Service for the District of Columbia; and as a judicial law intern for Judge Maribeth Raffinan in the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

Featured Representative Matters

- Through KIND, represented juvenile immigrant pro bono in his petition for Special Immigrant Juvenile Status (SIJS), where the District of Columbia Superior Court found in the juvenile's favor, concluding that it was in his best interest to be placed in custody in D.C., granting him SIJS and allowing him to obtain a work permit (2024).

Cross-Office Stradley Ronon Team Secures 'Clean Slate' Expungement for Pro Bono Client

In partnership with South Jersey Legal Services, a cross-office Stradley Ronon team has successfully secured an expungement for a pro bono client.

Under New Jersey's "clean slate" expungement law, those convicted of various low-level offenses who have not committed an offense in the last 10 years are able to petition to have their criminal records expunged or erased. Partner David Piper and associate Rebecca Fallk — working across the firm's Southern California and Philadelphia offices, respectively — filed for expungement on behalf of the client, who had maintained a clean record for more than a decade.

The client was granted a clean-slate expungement on June 6 — a significant development that will allow him access to gainful employment and other opportunities.

DOJ's Whistleblower Pilot Program Pays Employees to Report Misconduct

August 14, 2024

Law enforcement officials are now offering money to employees to report their colleagues' and employers' bad conduct. A new program implemented by the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) incentivizes employees to report corporate misconduct directly to the government rather...
